

Questions for Your First Human Conversation

You do not need to tell your whole story at once.

Start with where things stand, what is unclear, and the kind of help you want. The conversation is an opportunity to understand the service's role and whether its communication feels comfortable to you.

Questions I can bring to Fast Divorce

- ☐ What does document preparation include for someone at my stage?
- ☐ What decisions and specific directions would you need from me?
- ☐ What is outside your scope? Which questions belong with an attorney or court self-help center?
- ☐ If I already filed, what records would help explain the work I am asking about?
- ☐ How would I provide sensitive documents securely?
- ☐ What would I review? How are questions and corrections handled?
- ☐ How are service terms, charges, communication, and expected work explained before I decide?
- ☐ Are there options for how the documents are structured, such as keeping financial details out of the public judgment?
- ☐ What is the next step if I choose to proceed?

What helps me feel heard

- ☐ Plain language
- ☐ Time to take notes
- ☐ A written explanation
- ☐ A private way to raise a concern
